OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION MANUAL

COMPARISON TABLES 1971 TO 1961

INTRODUCTION

The 1971 Occupational Classification Manual, (OCM), based on the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations and designed for the 1971 Census is considerably different from those employed in the past. The classification, was developed jointly by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and Statistics Canada as a multi-purpose tool for job placement, counselling, vocational training, manpower planning and related purposes in addition to those associated with the compilation of statistics.

Data gathered using the new classification could not readily be compared with those from 1961 or previous Censuses. To remedy the situation; a) the comparison tables in this paper were developed to assist users interested in obtaining broad trend estimates, and b) a recoding project in Census Division was undertaken to provide researchers with detailed trend statistics. The introduction describes both sources for obtaining comparable data, so that the user may determine the approach that best suits his needs.

THE COMPARISON TABLES FOR BROAD TREND COMPARISONS

Though at the detailed level the 1971 classification differs considerably from the one used in 1961, it is possible to aggregate the 1971 unit groups so that they become generally comparable with the 1961 divisions shown below, cautioning however that significant discrepancies described further on in the paper would yet exist:

- 1/2. Managerial, Professional and Technical Occupations
3. Clerical Occupations
4. Sales Occupations
5. Service and Recreation Occupations
6. Transport and Communication Occupations
7. Farmers and Farm Workers
8. Loggers and Related Workers
9. Fishermen, Trappers and Hunters
10. Miners, Quarrymen and Related Workers
- 11/12. Craftsmen, Production Process and Related Workers and Labourers, n.e.s.
13. Occupation Not Stated.

Table 1 summarizes the relationship between the 1971 unit groups and these eleven 1961 divisions.

Although about two thirds of the 1971 unit groups relate perfectly to one of the divisions listed above, in the remaining instances some titles within the unit group relate to other divisions and these have been identified in Table 2 along with their corresponding division codes. On casual inspection, this list of discrepant titles may still appear extensive, however the reader will note that many of the titles within the groupings, (because the lists were originally prepared for coding purposes) are alternates for one another or otherwise closely related. Consequently the discrepancies requiring reconciliation will be fewer than those listed. We have partially reduced the length of the list by omitting inverted titles also present in their natural order and French designations.

Researchers using these tables are advised to consider the statistical significance of the discrepant titles within the categories of concern to them. In some instances the researcher may dismiss these titles as irrelevant applying a knowledge of the occupational structure of the geographic area under investigation. In other circumstances where these titles might produce significant sources of incomparability, the analyst may examine the tables from the recoded sample, described below to obtain estimates of the percentages the discrepant titles form of the 1971 unit groups in question. Or, the analyst may further combine divisions to eliminate the incomparabilities, where such combinations would not detract from the utility of the data.

Users should also note, in identifying managerial occupations in the 1971 Census, the coders were instructed to apply several criteria, one of which was income level. As a result, some persons with low income who would have been coded as managers in the past were coded to supervisory unit groups. Consequently researchers concerned with strict comparability in division 1/2 are also advised to consider the recoded data, described below.

THE RECODING PROJECT FOR DETAILED TREND COMPARISONS

At the detailed occupation level, it is not possible to meaningfully relate the 1971 and 1961 classification structures. In addition, at this level, sources other than classification differences can significantly effect comparability; for example: different wording of questions concerning occupation, different enumeration methods, general interpretation of coding manuals, special instructions given during the actual coding process, (such as those relating to managers described above) and computer edits made during processing.

In order to obtain detailed trend figures and estimates of the importance of some of the discrepant titles listed in Table 2 the Economic Characteristics Group of Census Characteristics Division has undertaken a project to recode the occupation question on a sample (109,555) of 1971 Census questionnaires, using the 1961 occupational classification system. The training of coding clerks was the same as used in 1961; the coding consultant on the project performed a similar role in 1961, which hopefully resulted in duplication even of some undocumented changes to coding procedures; and the computer edits affecting occupation were applied where feasible. Obviously, it was not possible to control for incomparability stemming from different wording of questions or enumeration techniques.

The sample was sufficiently large to produce meaningful statistics at the Canada and, in most instances, provincial level, though its coverage was too limited to produce reliable figures for cities, towns and other sub-provincial areas. Such a sample would have been excessively costly.

Researchers requiring detailed figures for trend analyses purposes are advised to use the recoded data available through the Census Data Dissemination Division of Statistics Canada. To assist in analyses at the sub-provincial level, a special cross-tabulation will be prepared for each of the provinces, showing the total number of persons in each 1971 minor group according to the 1961 class (the equivalent of the unit group in the 1961 classification) in which they are found. In this way the user will be able to calculate for each 1971 minor group the percentage of persons found in the various 1961 classes. The user can then examine his 1971 sub-provincial area statistics, and applying the same percentages as relate to the province, (or some variation deemed more applicable) break up the 1971 minor groups and re-aggregate the data so that it becomes generally comparable with the detailed 1961 Census statistics.

For users of the comparison tables found in this volume, a special tabulation also available from Census Data Dissemination Division will be produced at the Canada level showing 1971 unit groups against 1961 classes, which will identify the statistical significance of the discrepant titles listed in Table 2.
